My wife has been after me for some time to buy myself a pair of shoes.

"But I have a pair of shoes," I keep telling her. Surely that clinches the argument, doesn't it? But my wife never knows when she is beaten.

"They have holes in them," she says. How like a woman, bringing up matters that have nothing to do with the point.

shoe store." I tell her. "That's all those shoes need."
"The shoes will fall to pieces if they're touched."
"Then I'll tell the man to shine my feet."
My wife made a despairing gesture and fell silent.
I live in the belief that money spent on clothes and shoes is money wasted. When I draft the budget, I never put down anything for clothes or shoes. Why shouldn't our present garments last another year? And if they are going to last, there is no need to worry about them.

And the budget only gets torn up anyway, so what does it matter?

what does it matter?

My wife, on the other hand, says that clothes are bound to wear out. She looks upon clothes and shoes as necessities. Ridiculous, eh? I'm not so sure, now.

Sitting down for a rest after dinner, I noticed a clammy feeling in my feet. I stamped them slightly and they squelched. Examination showed a ragged trap door in the sole of one shoe, leading directly to the sock. The other shoe was much the same, except that the trap door was larger and had a flap of leather over it.

The upper had come loose from the sole in two or three places, and curled up delicately, like the petals of a flower.

"Ah." I said. "Those must be the holes you keep talking about.

"Yes."

"Well, it's too late to do anything about them now," I said. "If we're going to the Totem tonight, we'll have to start in a few minutes."

Then it occurred to me that there was a box of old shees living in honorable retirement in the basement. Among them was one brown pair that might be restored to service. Asking my wife to look for the box of shoes. I drove around the lake to fetch the baby-sitter. My wife failed to find the shoes, of course. I found them at once, removed my air-conditioned shoes in the half darkness of the front room and slipped on the rediscovered pair. They were cold but they seemed dry.

In the theatre I noticed a kind of goaty, pungent smell that was causing the lady in the next seat to lean heavily toward the west, like a windblown tree.

"My gosh," I whispered to my wife in the middle of the first act, "I believe the smell is coming from my shoes."

Return to Fundamentals

THE Social Credif government has now come full circle on hospital insurance policy. Except for some slight modifica-tion of the original details, chiefly setting up a means test bureau, the scheme in all major financial aspects is back where it was before the impetuous new govern ment began its misguided tinkering with something another administration had created after long and patient study. Had the Socreds been less anxious to ingratiate themselves, the public anger and confusion which have submerged the scheme these last 18 months need not have been engendered. If, however, the government engendered. If, however, the government has learned a bitter lesson from this experience, that in the long run is all to the good so far as the province is concerned. This week's surprising change of policy restores the basic principle of uniform compulsion in the collection of premiums, which is the keystone of the entire scheme. Through chipping at it by writing off the arrears owed by premium dodgers the Socreds had threatened the whole structure with collapse. The government whole structure with collapse. The gov-ernment's biggest blunder was in assum-ing that the public could be made to accept a situation imposing compulsion on the wage-earners while exempting the rest. Aside from the ethics of the case, it is hard to believe that any government could have been so foolish; but the Socreds had to believe that any government could have been so foolish; but the Socreds had campaigned on a pledge to make hospital Insurance voluntary, and that was the strange and contradictory way in which they tried to create an appearance of fulfilling their promise.

The government's handling of hospital insurance has been a devious performance from the beginning. Even with the premium evaders it has not taken an above-board course. By forgiving debts legally owing to the public fund and representing the scheme as voluntary, the government trapped 10,000 defaulters (the minister's own figure) into enrolling. Then ernment_trapped 10,000 defaulters (the minister's own figure) into enrolling. Then it turns round and tells them in effect, "Now that we have your names, you'll pay or be prosecuted." The defaulters deserve no one's sympathy on that account, but this method of getting them into the scheme certainly does not reflect the openness one is entitled to expect from an elected government. elected government.

return at last to a principle which The return at last to a principle which manifestly is essential in any state plan of this sort is to be applauded. That, however, does not automatically exonerate the government from blame for the disorder, the inequities and the acrimony which persisted throughout the province for more than a year solely because of the new adpersisted throughout the provided than a year solely because of the new admake voluntary something which all those with experience in such matters had shown could not be operated on that basis.

PROGRESSIVE decline of the Canadian Pacific steamship schedules on ferry routes on this scaboard may have come about originally through wartime tonnage losses and lack of vision in building ahead, but only in regard to the Vancouver-Nanaimo connection has anything like a pre-war standard been maintained. Vessels designed for the short run between those two points are filling the bill. On the trirun in winter between the thre main coast cities, in the Gulf Islands, and now on the West Coast of Vancouver Island the tonnage gaps have gone un-filled. At the moment the plight of isolated West Coast towns seems the most crucial.

For some 40 years the Princess Maquinna, a sturdy sea-going vessel of Maquinna, a sturdy sea-going vessel of 1,776 tons, made regular sailings up the West Coast and at times around Vancourer Island, in a steady and prosperous trade. Six months ago her boilers gave up the ghost. There was no apparent effort to replace them, and the steamship was withdrawn. The Princess of Alberni, a withdrawn. The Princess of Alberni, a much smaller craft and one in no way suited to ply the "Graveyard of the Pacific" in winter weather, even if she had adequate passenger accommodation-which she has not, took over part of the Maquinna's former route. Recently the Princess of Alberni was towed into port behind a salvage vessel, licked by winter conditions on the bleak seaboard.

One can understand the concern of the West Coast settlements. Port Alberni and Alberni my three by the concern of the settlements.

Alberni may have bus and rat Vansporta-tion to rely upon, but that is not replace-ment for the loss of a regularly trading steamship of the Maquinna's class. Three sailings a month by the Princess of Alberni, when she is able to stand the weather, do not take the place of regular weekly sailings. Simultaneously normal air traffic with the Canal region has been cut. The problem for settlers at Ucluelet, Tofino and still more isolated points with hard weather coming on and no real guarantee of winter stores and supplies is a matter of unquestionable concern.

The whole picture is disturbing.

Island boards of trade and similar bodies have every reason to ask what is the intention of the charter holders with regard to future service by sea to West Coast points and always are

THE Gouzenko affair seems to be about over, which is just as well. Perhaps Canadian-U.S. temperatures will now re-cede to normal and an unpleasant incident cede to normal and an unpreasant to the be forgotten. The former Soviet cypher clerk has changed his mind about being questioned and the U.S. state department will not press the issue further. The firm will not press the issue further. The firm stand taken by Ottawa has been justified; had it been taken at the beginning perhaps much of the furore might have been

A worthwhile point in the recent parliamentary debate on the subject made by Mr. Stanley Knowles, CCF, is worth noting. He said shrewdly that if Gouzenko noting. He said shrewdly that if Gouzenko allowed himself to be interviewed by U.S. investigators similar requests would be made for other Canadians to testify, and that the first of such Canadians to refuse would be branded a Communist. That seems most likely and it illustrates the wisdom of steering clear of procedures wisdom of steering clear of procedures that are anathema in Canada.

One might wish Mr. Gouzenko would practice a little retirence, however. He it was whose published statements involved this country in current U.S. politics, and now he is pontificating again. He is perfectly free to express his opinions, but his course is scarcely consistent with the protective custody afforded him so that he and his family may remain safe and sound. In any case his views on world affairs are not necessarily profound, and the fact that he was once a Soviet clerk does not make him an authority. It may be interesting to hear him declare his belief that a third world war is near but that opinion can have no more weight than the next man's, perhaps even not so much. He seems to be trying to ride two horses at once, living in hiding yet not averse to publicity.

The weather, of course. And why? Because there was always such variety about it.

You may not agree, but such a calumny could scarcely be noised abroad about Victoria. The weatherman's charts disclose a relatively even and gentle character in this favored part of the globe.

Or so I understand.

The weather, naturally, is the taple of the world's conversation. What momentous results have followed on an innocent comment ab the state of the heavens, and what a gap there would be if this convenient topic were always not to hand!

Bruce Bairnstather summed up weather neatly in a war cartoon that showed a poor unfortunate our on night patrol, crawling through barbed wire in no-man's land. A full moon was shining brightly and he expected any moment to be rudely dealt with. You can imagine the remarks he

Reports from Ottawa

In the Commons who constitute the show window of conservatism in this country are being watched closethese days for signs of changes in their party's political course.

As a result of the decisiveness of the Tories' defeat August 10, a considerable number of intelligent rank-and-filers are wondering if political success might not lie in a direction somewhat different from that in which the party has been heading for the last 10 years. They say that five election defeats in a row make it obvious that something is wrong with the party's position and policies, But there's no unanimity as to which way the party should go.

Some Conservatives, including oldline Tories who have been in an "I told you so" frame of mind since the election, want to veer to the right. Let's get back to true conservatism," they urge, opining that the party had lost ground by abandoning, or at least leaning away from, the traditional Tory position

Others, whom you might call the progressives in the party, insist you can't turn back the clock. They say policies which elected Bennett in 1930, policies which elected Bennett in 1930, and Meighen-and Borden before him, won't elect George Drew in 1957. Or any successor to George Drew.

These two viewpoints within the party are not new. But the conflict between them has been intensified by realization that the party isn't getting anywhere. It's stagnating, and a new approach is needed. Which, or what, will Jt he?

In fruth, it's a hearthreaking task, rebuilding on the ruins left after August 10. The Tory platform had been carefully constructed to produce the greatest possible vote appeal. In light of its ineffectiveness, many a Tory has asked, what more can we do?

A lot, of course, will depend on political exigencies in the next four years. But one basic problem must

More important, however, it would enable the Tories to establish salient points of difference between the selves and the Liberals which, come election time, might make the party acceptable to the voters. For example, one might be developed for the Conservative MPs' current

Time, incidentally; may be against the government, but not necessarily on the side of the Tories. There might well be no room for a Con-servative party as such if the Social Crediters' made good their boast of "On to Ottawa."

On the Record

By DOROTHY THOMPSON

HE goal of tracking down international Communists has not been served by Senator Jenner's poena, as it were, spionage as is ne United States, When in 1945 Mr.

spy ring operating in Canada, he the greatest uncovering job per-formed to that date in North America. The -proceedings of the trial were fully published afterward in the famous "blue book."

* * * There is close and continuous liaison between the FBI and similar bureaus of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, whose investigations are conducted secretly. Pub-licity normally comes only when in-vestigations result in an indictment.

Mr. Gouzenko, now a Canadian pends upon the Canadian govern ment for his protection. Soviet offi-cial; who disclose Soviet servets take their lives in their hands. The long arm of "Communist justice" has delivered its sentence often years after an event, and in places scattered all over the globe.

If the FBI wished to interview Mr. Gouzenko, confidentially, in the possi-bility that he might throw further light on persons under inquiry, that endoubtedly rould have been ar-

But the remarkable position taken But the remarkable position taken by Senator Jenner and conveyed to the Canadian foreign secretary by Mr. Dulles, is that a committee of the United States Senate has a right of access to Mr. Gouzenko, with rio strings attached to the use made of whatever testimony he may disclose The Canadian government did not categorically refuse the Jenner re-quest. The Canadian minister for external affairs only specified that the interview be conducted under Canadian auspices and procedures and that the Canadian government reserve a veto on publicity.

The Canadian government's post-The Canadian government's posi-tion is entirely proper. Canada is a sovereign state. Canadian law and procedures are not the same as those in the United States: And although Mr. Gouzenko is a free citizen, it would be entirely improper for any American to seek his co-operation in circumventing his own government.

* * * Canada, was incensed when the U.S. attorney general declassified and read into the public record a confidential document originating in Canada, without previous consulta-tion with the Canadian government, tion with the Canadian government and even though unintentionally misrepresented the source and circumstances of the information.

The effect of all this is to unite both of the leading Canadian parties, the Canadian press and Canadian opinion from Quebec to Victoria against American intervention.

As a result, Canada may be more circumspect in co-operating with our investigating bureaus in the future than she has in the past, apprehend-ing that whatever secret information she divulges may be publicized to secure headlines for politicians.

We cannot understand why the secretary of state did not refuse to transmit Senator Jenner's request in the form in which he made it. Mr. Dulles must have foreseen its unfortunate diplomatic repercussions. He also might have pointed out that whatever functions congressional committees serve, the conduct of foreign relations is not one of them.

But it is difficult to ascertain who onducts our foreign affairs. If the find that the functions of the state partment were usurped by the asury department, during White's sultation with Mr. Cordell Hull, then

The Canadian government and the Canadian people have. I think, a considerably stronger sense of proprieties than we. They are the best ties than we. They are the best friends we have in the world, bar none alt is rather important to keep

Rules Jockey Not Slandered When Report Said 'Bad Ride'

SPOKANE, Wash. (AP)—A jockey who filed a $100,000 libel suit because of a newspaper story that criticized the way he rode the favorite in a race, doesn't have a case, a judge ruled Tuesday.

Superior Judge Carl C. Quackenbush, in a memorandum opinion, rolled that jockey Norman Cohen didn't introduce sufficient facts for a cause of action. The judge said the language used in the story wasn't libelous.

Cohen filed the suit last summer after a story.

Cohen filed the suit last summer after a story in The Spokesman-Review said the jockey gave a "bad ride" to the heavy favorite in a feature race at Playfair Track here. Cohen's horse lost. His suit also named the reporter who wrote the story. Frank C. Ferguson. Cohen said the story wasn't true and lost him mounts.

Interior lumber operators have refused to accept Premier W. A C. Bennett's plan for mediation of the three-month-old lumberworkers' strike, union spokesmen said Wednesday.

The statement followed the fourth and apparently the last of a series of conferences between union, management and government representatives.

Details of Premier Bennett's plan were outlined for the first time Wednesday by George Mitchell, secretary-treasurer of B.C. District No. 1, International Woodworkers of America.

The premier had proposed that the union and the lumber but said the operators would operators each nominate four have to produce a better oromen as mediators. The eight nominipees would then meet to pick one of their number as southern operators.
